FIVE UM PROFESSORS GIVE LAST LECTURES

Each week for five weeks beginning Tuesday, Jan. 25, a University of Montana faculty member will deliver a "Last Lecture," as part of a series of lectures by UM faculty members.

The speeches will be free and open to the public in the UM University Center Lounge. Each will begin at 8 p.m. Tuesdays.

A UM senior student scholastic honorary, Mortar Board, has arranged for and is sponsoring the series. The faculty members will prepare and give their lectures as though they were the last and most important in their careers.

The schedule, speakers and topics for the "Last Lecture" series:

Jan. 25, Teresa Beed, assistant professor of accounting and finance, "A Reflection on the Behavioral Aspects of Accounting: Christopher Columbus to Multinational Corporations."

Feb. 1, John Photiades, associate professor of economics, "The Future as Present: a Gasping Look at Our Fishbowl Economy."

Feb. 8, Howard Reinhardt, professor of mathematics and acting dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, "One Hundred and One Statistical Blunders Made in the Home."

Feb. 15, David Emmons, professor and chairman of history, "Native Reformers and the Immigrant Catholics: a History Lesson."

Feb. 22, Walter Koostra, associate professor of microbiology, "Human Ecology."
